Kobe University Interdisciplinary Master Program (KIMAP) in Management

The Graduate School of Business Administration at Kobe University initiated a new MA/PhD program, the Strategic Entrepreneurship and Sustainability Alliance Management Initiatives (SESAMI) program, in 2013. In 2015, its master's program became a part of the Global Master Programs (GMAPs) jointly established with Law and Economics Schools and came to be called the GMAP in Management (SESAMI). In 2023, GMAPs will be further developed into a new program titled the "Kobe University Interdisciplinary Master Program" (hereafter, KIMAP), emphasizing the interdisciplinary education of social science.

The KIMAP emphasizes the interdisciplinary nature of technical knowledge and aims to develop human resources equipped with the abilities of policymaking, strategic planning, and execution to solve social issues. The goal of the program is to develop interdisciplinary knowledge, compound thinking, and evidence-based decision-making abilities with the advanced analytical skills that are required in a progressive society.

Program Overview and Issues Covered During the Program

The SESAMI program, which started in 2013, identified two problems that need to be addressed: the relative lack of entrepreneurship and sustainable alliances with the environment and regional society in Japan. To achieve the ultimate aim of revitalizing Japanese economies, the program aimed to (1) define the educational and research domain of strategic entrepreneurship and sustainability alliance management, which fuses entrepreneurship and sustainable alliances, and (2) produce strategic entrepreneurship and sustainability alliance management experts who can set global standards to leverage the strengths of Japanese business systems.

However, to keep pace with the restructuring of the world order and the advent of new technologies, Japan, alongside other countries, is seeking professionals who can provide solutions for social issues and economic development. Starting in 2023, the KIMAP in management will respond to such social needs through advanced and interdisciplinary education.

The program comprises three fields: "International Business," "Entrepreneurship & Finance," and "Sustainable Development & Public Policy." The three graduate schools of law, economics, and business administration offer courses in these fields. The objective of the program is to enable students to organically integrate technical knowledge and analytical skills into an interdisciplinary program to solve broad social issues.

Features of the Program and the Types of Graduates It Seeks to Produce

The KIMAP in Management aims to develop professionals with policymaking, strategic planning, and execution abilities to solve social issues.

The program covers interdisciplinary fields with advanced specialized disciplines based on basic social science courses. The goal of the program is to foster superior personnel who are capable of conducting evidence-based management and policymaking and contribute widely to global society. The experts produced by this MA program are equipped with advanced specialist knowledge in each field: international business, entrepreneurship and finance, sustainable development, and public policy. They possess a systematic understanding and analytical capabilities in these fields. They also have practical problem-solving and theorizing capabilities to reconstruct management theories through hypothesis formation and testing in areas where corporate activities are conducted internationally. In addition, they can exercise leadership to coordinate with stakeholders across multiple organizations.

The program places emphasis on new and unique initiatives and strategic alliances as follows:

1. An interdisciplinary curriculum of social sciences will be offered based on the collaborative work of law and economics schools.
2. All-English-language coursework will continue throughout the year, with subjects taught in collaboration with researchers affiliated with overseas universities.
3. Research projects will involve collaboration with companies that conduct international business. The projects are designed to develop practical problem-solving abilities.
4. International research seminars and workshops aimed at building international academic standards are regularly held.

Student Admission Policies

The school seeks applicants from a broad range of backgrounds, both from Japan and overseas, who wish to work after their completion of the program as strategic entrepreneurship and sustainable alliance management experts both in academic institutions and in companies deploying their operations internationally. The classes in the first year of the master's program cover general business subjects, and the program is open to a broad range of applicants, irrespective of their previous fields of university study. Applicants may hold degrees in other social sciences, natural sciences, or humanities.

In the selection process, applicants will be evaluated on their English communication ability as demonstrated by suitable scores in TOEFL, IELTS or TOEIC, their basic scholastic aptitude as demonstrated by suitable scores in GMAT or GRE, or their potential research capability as demonstrated by previous research output or class assignment research reports, as well as evaluations they have received and the research plan they have developed.
